Meriden Spook Seems to Resent Fact Husband Has Married Again.

MERIDIAN, Conn., March 11.— Rheingold Kirshstein is a ghost victim night and day. All night he worries lest the ghost of his first wife return and another flatiron at her suc-All day he frets over newsreports from Nova Sci where a ghost taming scientist and natives are complaining to return to his regular haunt. Kirghstein cannot understand their attitude

He is serious about it, and so is the Rev. Samuel F. Glaser, pastor of St. John's Lutheran Church. The pastor heard the reports of Kirsh-stein and Mrs. Kirshstein No. 2, also a few words from the three Kirshstein children by Mrs. Kirsh-stein No. 1, and felt impelled to exercise the priestly office of ex-orcism of evil spirits. He did it, too. The ghost of Mrs. Kirshstein No. 1 was banished by something. The vicinity of the Kirshstein bome, 123 Lewis avenue, is so worked up that a single scream in the night from that house is sure to make four-score heads of neighboring hair stand right up on end.

Kirshstein's first wife died in January, 1921, and in July he married me, 123 Lewis avenue, is so work-

Kirshstein stalled off the inevitable till February 8. Then Mr. K. No. 2 reported the wraith had been around again, acting very, very mean and had wound up an unpleasant call by picking up a flatiron and throw-ing at it Mrs. K. No. 2. Mrs. K. No. 2 showed the dent in the kitchen wall made by the flatiron when it missed her. Kirsh-stein could not stand that sort of thing tamely. He and his wife went to their pastor. The Rev. Mr. Glaser is a practical, helpful man and his ministra tions proved effective in the Kirshstein case. He keeps an eye on the Kirshstein household, and if there is a hint of more ghosts walking he wants to know all about it. Kirshstein's belated conversion to recognition of the ghost was due to a personal experience, he de-He was asleep in bed. As "Snowflake" She Seems Light as Thistledown-"Cali-

ternoon at the National Theater by Mrs. Wilson-Greene.
There were two big dramatic scenes and a variety of "divertisements." Urban painted the striking snow scene for "Snowflakes" with its giant snow-ladened boughs in hues of misty blue, sea-green,

Here "the Pavlowa" was true queen of the art of the ballet. As the glistening enowflake she seemed as light as thistledown, with that airy quality of her's that scaredly seems to touch the ground. With Novikoff, whose heroic proportions and virile beauty gave life to a sculptured idea, Pavlowa made visible the episodes from the airy music of Tchaikowsky's "Nut-creekee's Suite" most delightfully music of Tchaikowsky's "Nut-cracker's Suite," most delightfully played by the orchestra under the baton of Theodore Stier. That plucked little polks found her toe steps alive to each vagrant note.
That is the marvel of Paviowa!

And what a body she has! And again, as in the final splendor of the vivid Russian dance, what comedy she put into her pantom A new Pavlowa dance is her California Poppy. Raiment of silken petals drooped beneath that exotic little head with short blonds wig like the tiny god Pan. Her delicate fingers were as expressive as her toes. Her luminous eyes were shadowed like the dream world of Poppyland. And Pavlowa's dance was elfen, illusive, folding her petals at the close over a vanished fairy.

With all the art of an excellen company, it is that fairy touch of Pavlowa's spirit that makes all else seem mundane. Except with the dainty Butsova, who is the embodiment of youth, and who possesses a different but a rare ballet

The first scene, the "Magic Flute," with music by Drigo, had Butsova for star and Pianowski, a most graceful mischief-maker. The ensemble was rich in rural pictures. the corps de ballet excellent, and the setting completed an artistic Novikoff was stunning in his virtuoso feats of ballet. Kara-valeff, a whirling dervish of marvelous execution, received great ap-preciation. And Warzinski deserves special praise, as does little Mile. Bartlett as the Holland girl. Over it all the ballet scenes of "Snowflakes" remain as the highest art of the program, and the Liszt "Hungarian Rhapsody," with Warzinski and an ensemble, one of the most brilliant and exquisitely tumed groups. The music with the dancing was complete and satisfying. JESSIE MacBRIDE.
